What is feedback and how does it relate to change? Effective change management requires a feedback loop that allows for continuous improvement and adaptation. Feedback is essential for understanding the impact of change and making necessary adjustments. It involves listening to the voices of those affected by change and using that information to refine the process. Feedback can be formal, such as through surveys or focus groups, or informal, such as through one-on-one conversations. The key is to create a culture where feedback is encouraged and valued, and where it is used to drive positive change.
